ARTISTS' FETE. Rome, April 37.

To-day has been the great fête day of the artists of Rome. I have endeavored in vain to ascover the origin or design of this oddest of all universaries in the imperial city. It is confined 10 no nation, but embraces the artists of every and who wish to partake of its festivities and foleries. For several days previous books are kept open at the Greek Cafe for those strangers tho wish to enter their names as members on the occasion, and who receive in return a blue abbon to wear as a badge during the festivities. The place of carousal is about ten miles from the city in the open Campagna. The location is as odd as the celebration that honors it. To be sheltered from the sun, if it be a bright Italian day, and to be protected from the wet, if it be a rainy one, they have selected the ancient Quarries of Rome for their festive hall. These Quarries are the interior of a slight eminence hollowed out into chambers and arches by the gradual excavations of former centuries. The dning-hall is an old forsaken ruin near by. At eight o'clock they meet from every part of the city in front of St. Maria Maggiore, to form their procession. First comes a cart and oxen, garlanded for the occasion, on which is throned the President, dressed like nothing you ever beheld, and after him the motley group of artists and their friends, to the amount of several hundred. Each had his costume, and one would think they had not studied the old paintings in vain. Such out of the way and yet often picturesque garbs could be found in no country except Italy-and then the animals they ride, some are horses, some mules, and some the smallest, most villainous looking donkeys Rome can fur-

My friend and myself did not accompany the procession out, but walked up to view the baths of Dioclesian, and from them to the San Lorenzo gate, expecting to catch a return hack. Soon one came up, and I hailed the driver, asking him what he would demand to take us out to the fête. Just then it began to sprinkle—the first few drops of a heavy shower. The fellow looked as if he thought he had caught us, and his management you may take as a perfect illustration of an Italian's mode of making a bargain-with foreigners. He demanded just double of an extraordidinary price, so I offered him half. No-he would n't listen to it-and after some altercation I told him to drive on, I could do without him. He then fell a third, but I persisted in my first offer, and bade him go on. He drew up his reins and started off. But just before he turned an ingle in the road which concealed him from view, he pulled up and hallooed to know if I would go for so much, naming a trifle less. I shook my head, and he vanished from sight. "There," said my friend, "we are now in a pretty fixraining like a storm, and no way of getting to the fête or to the city." But I knew my man, and replied, "Do you suppose he has gone for good?' In three minutes he will be back," and true enough the next moment a pair of black lorses trotted into view, and our friend pulled up where we stood to drive another bargain. He Il still more from his original price, and began to praise his vehicle and show us all its comforts, especially in a rain storm. I was vexed at the ellow's impudence, and coolly asked him why he returned; I was not anxious at all to have his carriage; he had better drive back to the city, or he would lose the opportunity of taking some one else. He drew up his reins with all the hauteur of an old Roman, and cracking his whip drove away with an air that said, as plainly as actions could say it, "Good day, sir-this is the last you will see of me." After he had disappeared, my friend again began, "There, now, you have done it. He has gone sure enough, and we bit of it," said I. "The difference in the price he offers to take and I offer to give is trifling, but don't you see the rascal thinks to take advantage of our circumstances? I will stand here under this old colonnade till night before I will give him one baiocca more than I have offered him .-Besides, he will be back in a minute. It is true that last take off was very well done, but the Italians are used to acting. Such an offer as I made him he has not had to-day, and he is the last man to lose it. The next time he will return and tell us to get in." I was right. In a few minutes the black team was in sight. The hauteur of the Roman had vanished, and with a buch of the hat and a smile that would have made the fortune of an English valet, he bade "Excellencies" mount, hoping we would remember and give him a "buonomano" "Not a ht of it" said I, though I afterward did, of my own free will. But I would not have it in the Such is universally an Italian's mode of making a bargain. After driving five or six miles, We turned into the fields through which, far befire us, were slowly winding along trains of cartages filled with the fun-loving Italians. At eagth we came in sight of the spot consecrated 7 art and such a sight. Did you ever see a general training" in the country? Then you eve the first view of the "artists' fete." Scatand over the green field were carriages filled with fair spectators, patches of strolling peddlars, tarts with the team detached and "wine and to sell," and all the strange and motley touping of a Yankee "training ground." All bese were on the summit of the eminence, unemeath which were the quarries and the artists. As I approached, suddenly from out the bowels of the earth came a hurrah as wild and jolly as ever Bacchus, in the hight of glory and greathess, made to ring through the home of the gods. The next moment I heard an earnest voice hurhedly inquire, "Ganymede! where is Jupiter?" and then the Bacchanalian song Io Bacche. Really I began to think there might be, after all, a batch of the old gods below, holding a sort of anniversary revel here, on the borders of their old dominions. I hastened down, and oh, such a spectacle! It is impossible to describe it. At one end of the caverns sat the presiding god. Around him were flags of every description and ornaments of no description. He had on a necklace made, I should suppose, of a huge Bologna sausage, with pieces a foot and a half long, putting out at intervals all round it at the end of which stood an imp striving with all his might to fill it with wind. At his side stood a drummer that looked more like a griffin than a man, beating rapid and hurried beats upon his drum, while at every pause arose the chorus of me wild German song. Before him, in the dirt, were all sorts of divinities waltzing-twothirds drunk. Round and round they would spin, ankle deep in the powdered clay, until they came on the broken rock with a jar that made my bones ache even to see. Poor fellows, thought I to myself, you will have enough to do to-morrow to count your bruises.

This is only a specimen of what was passing. There were other groups in various parts of the quarries, each with its peculiar scene. At length company of Germans determined to have a ghost scene, and German like they went through all the ceremonies of raising a spirit. In one of the darkest parts of the quarries was deposited a body wrapped in a sheet. At the entrance stood a company of Germans and began one of their ghostly incantations. It was enough to chill one's blood. Slowly and solemnly the incantation rose and echoed through the cavern until the ghost was actually raised. There were many excellent singers among the German artists, and some of the chorusses were admirable. I never beheld a revel to which there was no limit, and no law in which there was such perfect abandonment as this. It seemed impossible that the human heart could so utterly throw off all restraint. Indeed it could hardly be called a revel-it was a frolic, a wild and lawless frolic. The animal spirits of each seemed at the evaporating point.

In such reckless mirth, amid flowing wine and song and dance, the hours wore on till the signal was given for the closing up scene, which was a general horse, donkey and mule race out upon the green sward. It was here that the figures and costumes showed to advantage. Thousands of people, some in carriages, some on foot, were scattered over the field. For a back ground a black rain cloud lay along the horizon. The sunlight from the clear West falling brightly over the grassy plain threw the figures on it in strong relief against that dark cloud in the distance, til every color, ribbon and plume, was distinctly revealed. As the crowd gave way, and horseman after horseman galloped into view, it seemed more like a description I had read in some oriental tale than an actual passing scene. Now ten or fifteen in a company, mounted without a saddle, would gallop like the wind over the plain, their velvet mantles and plumes streaming in the wind, and the spangles in their vests and bonnets flashing like diamonds in the sunlight. And half of them were such wild spiritual looking beings .-They were none of your hearty revellers, but had come out this once from the studio with all the marks of severe study and privation upon them, to be young and thoughtless for one day. Some of them were remarkably handsome fellows, and with their long black hair and blacker eyes and thin pale faces and singular costumes, they shot past you like beings of another planet. There were Americans among the rest, and I am sure if they could have dropped into their native towns at home just as they were mounted and dressed to-day, their friends would clap them in a lunatic asylum "sans ceremonie." The racing was a mere general scamper. One bold rider on a powerful black steed, galloved round and round without end or aim, while in another direction three artists were mounted on one little donkey, not much larger than a Newfoundland dog, which they were trying to beat into a gallop. But the poor little fellow could hardly waddle under his enormous load, and seemed perfectly stupified at the sights and sounds around him. But the blows which fell thick and fast were more natural and home like, and seemed to restore his selfconfidence, for the next moment he laid back his long ears, and with that villainous look a donkey may get out of the scrape as we can." "Not a alone can give, let fly his heels into the air, and over tumbled one of the sons of the divine art. While I was laughing at this ludicrous scene, a beggar girl that had often molested me in Rome came up and began her importunities again .-

She was the most impudent creature I ever met, and I could not shake her off, when a man dressed like a king rode slowly up on his donkey, and addressing the girl in the most grave, deliberate and solemn tone said, " Andate bia dicte troppo mportunente." 'Go away, you are too importunate. The girl looked at him a moment, and walked away without saying a word. I could hardly thank him for laughter, but he never smiled and wheeled his donkey away with the gravity of a philosopher. But it is impossible to describe the different groups in this strangest of all fêtes. An English lady whom I had often met in different parts of Italy, stood and looked on in perfect delight. She said she could not shake off the belief that she was in the midst of some Eastern romance. She was a beautiful sketcher, and in a few minutes the field and its grotesque groups were her own. How I envied her her possessions! At length the crowd, as all crowds must, broke up. But a small party galloped on before, and ascending a green mound on which stood an old ruin, wheeled and awaited the procession. In their picturesque garbs, beside that ancient ruin and both revealed in the soft light of the setting sun, they formed a strange and beautiful group. But soon the towers and obelisks of old Rome rose on the view, and I seemed to stand rebuked in their presence. I thought how these orgies had been celebrated over the grave of a fallen empire. I was told that Thorwalden a few years ago joined with Haddonfield, N. J. April 20, 1843.

On or about the 13th day of October, 1841, I was taken with a violent pain in the side near the liver, which continued about five days, and was followed by the breaking of an ulcer or abscess inwarfly, which relieved the pain a little, but caused me seess inwarfly. five days, and was followed by the breaking of an ulcer or absecss inwardiy, which relieved the pain a little, but caused me to throw up a great quantity of offensive matter, and also much blood. Being greatly alarmed at this, I applied to a physician, but he said he could do but little for me except to give mesome MERCURY Pfils, which I refused to take. Many other remedies were then procured by my wife and friends, but none did me any good. The discharge of blood and corruption still continued, every few days, till at last it became so offensive that I could scarcely breathe. I was also seized with a violent cough which at times caused me to raise much more blood than before. My disease still grew worse till February, when all hopes of recovery were given up, and my friends all thought I must die of a galloping Consumption.

At this time, when apparently my life was drawing near its close, I heard of Dr. Wictar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, and got a bottle, which relieved me immediately, and by the use of only three bottles of this medicine all my pains were removed; my cough and spitting of blood and corruption entirely stopped, and in a few weeks my health was so far restored as to enable me to work at my trade, (that of a carpenter,) and up to this time I have enjoy-d good health
